Chapter 1

Introduction

This book is a handbook for the construction of pre-1600 English place-names. The intended audience of the handbook is members of historical re-creation and re-enactment groups, such as the Society for Creative Anachronism, who are trying to construct plausible medieval English place names. Because English place names occur in Wales and Cornwall, in addition to in England, we often draw upon information from these places, though most non English place-names in both regions are omitted from discussion here. Also omitted from consideration here, for reasons of source availability, are Scottish place names which are English in origin.

This book is divided into multiple parts. It has an annotated bibliography (Part I), a semantic dictionary (Part II), and a discussion of construction (Part III).

Note that this book is very much a draft version. Additions, emendations, and corrections will be made continually. If you reference this text, please include in your citation the date of the version you used.

1.1 How to use this book

The best way to use this book is to familiarize yourself with the material in Part III, so that you have an idea of the range of possible constructions. Then, pick one of a class of geographic features that are important: e.g., woodland, cultivated land, or water. Use this to narrow down what section of Part II to browse.

Care should be taken to only combine spellings that are found in the same century; within 50 years is preferable.

1.2 Abbreviations and editorial practices

Abbreviations of sources cited can be found in the bibliography.

As is standard in works of this type, elements which are not independently attested but whose hypothetical form has been deduced from the extant place names have been marked with a *, and a letter in parentheses indicates that the word is found with and without that letter.

† This indicates that the element is a header in [CPNE], not [EPNE].

General works

In this chapter we provide a bibliography of general references for English place-names, as well as dictionaries which cover all of England (and sometimes more). The full citations for all of these books can be found in the bibliography.

Ekwall Ekwall, Eilert. 1991. The concise Oxford dictionary of English place-names, 4th ed. (Oxford: Oxford University Press).

Mawer Mawer, Allen, ed., The chief elements used in English place-names: being the second part of the introduction to the Survey of English place-names (Cambridge: University Press, 1924). This has been superseded by ([EPNE]).

Mills Mills, A.D. 1991. A dictionary of English place-names (Oxford: Oxford University Press). This is less comprehensive than [Ekwall] or [Watts], but it occasionally contains citations not found in these, and has the added advantage of being relatively cheap.

[CPNE] Padel, O.J. Cornish place-name elements. Similar in presentation to [EPNE], but containing much less detail. There is very little overlap in the elements covered, though.

[EPNE] Smith, A.H. English place-name elements

Watts Watts, Victor, ed. 2004. Cambridge dictionary of English place-names, based on the collections of the English place-name society, edited in association with John Insley and Margaret Gelling (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press)

Chapter 3

Regional works

Charles Charles, B.G. 1938. Non-Celtic place-names in Wales (London: University College). This is an excellent book for the subject indicated by the title; it includes many dated citations for each place name over a large time-span, and many discussions of etymology and history.

Glover Glover, Judith. 1975. The place names of Sussex (London: Batsford). Less comprehensive than ([MawerStenton29]).

MawerStenton29 Mawer, A. and F.M. Stenton. 1929–1930. The place-names of Sussex, English Place-Name Society vols. 6–7, (Cambridge: University Press).

Part II

Semantic dictionary

The element dictionaries discussed in Part I are organized by the root word of element. This is useful if you already have an Old English or Old Norse term that you are interested in. On the other hand, such dictionaries are of little use when you are trying to capture a certain meaning. We have therefore constructed a dictionary of meaning in this section.

We take for our primary source material [Watts]. All headers come from Watts unless otherwise noted. We take for our glosses those listed in [EPNE]. All element words, unless otherwise noted, can be found as headers in [EPNE].

Not all of the place names found in [Watts] are represented below. This is because some of the elements (especially tūn, hamm, hām, lēah, bȳ, burh) are so popular that to list every instance found would increase the size of this book manifold, with little positive benefit in terms of representation of different spellings. However, the size of an entry can, to some extent, be taken as an indication of the popularity of the element. Those elements which have only a handful of citations are generally much less common than those which have numerous citations and many spellings over a wide range of years.

Simple place names

Chapter 7

Compound place names

In this chapter we cover two types of compound place names: Those that are strictly speaking dithematic and those which are the conjoining of a third element to another, already compound and stand-alone place name.

7.1 Dithematic place names

Dithematic place names are those constructed out of two themes (hence the name): a substantive and a descriptive. The substantive element is usually the second element, and it is modified by the descriptive element which precedes it. A classic example of a dithematic place name is Acton, a compound of OE āc ‘oak’ + OE tūn ‘enclosure, estate, farmstead’.

Some words can only be used as protothemes (first elements) and some only as deuterthemes (second elements), and some can be used as both. A perusal of the example place names in each entry in Part II should be sufficient to show whether an element is a substantive or descriptive or both. If there is any doubt, the relevant entry in [EPNE] will usually contain a definitive statement.

7.1.1 Personal names as protothemes

A large number of dithematic English place names have a personal name (usually a given name, but sometimes a surname) as their descriptive element. Most of the given names are of Old English origin, but a reasonable number derive from Old Norse roots, and there are also a handful of examples from Celtic or roots. (See Appendix 8 for a list of personal names found in place names occurring in [Watts].) In this section we indicate which deuterthemes are found as substantive elements for personal names in Old English, Old Norse, and Cornish and Old Welsh.

7.2 Other compound place names

These fall into three categories. The first category is names which have been differenced from other, usually geographically close, instances of the same name by the addition of an adjective referring to size, location, or important, e.g., upper/lower, great/little, east/west, north/south. The second category is names which have been differenced from other places with the same name by the addition of a reference to the owner. These are formed by appending or prepending the owner's surname (sometimes in the genitive case, sometimes not) or a generic reference to the owner, e.g., Ardley Regis 1405 'king's Ardley' or Bire Regis, Byre Regis 1495 'king's Bire, Byre'.

Personal names found in English place names

In some cases, the identification of the underlying personal name cannot be made conclusively. In such cases, I have listed all potential underlying names. These lists do not include names of saints, family names, folk-names, or surnames.
